Co. 1 H. and N. 773. The learned counsel for appellee in his exhaustive brief, which we have fully examined and considered, has based his able argument upon hypotheses not justified by the evidence, and the court below erred in adopting that view of the law upon the facts proven. It is unnecessary to pass upon the other points presented, as the case was tried upon the theory above discussed. Reversed and remanded. Railway Company V. Hammond. Opinion delivered January 6, 1894. Master and servant--Rules. The reasonableness of a rule adopted by a railroad company for protection of its employees is purely a question of...
