General Technical Report PNW-GTR-687 Figure 3 - Roy Silen, pictured here during the group interview at Carpenter Lookout, was the first research forester in charge at the H. J. Andrews Experimental Forest (Andrews Forest) from the time it was first established in 1948 until he married Ethel Arthur in 1954 and accepted reassignment in Corvallis, Oregon. This 1997 visit was Silens first return to the Andrews Forest since his marriage. Among other accomplishments during his earlier career managing the landscape he viewed from this site, Silen laid out the road structure that later encouraged the retention and study of old-growth forest stands at the Andrews Forest. While meeting with the interview group in the library conference room at the headquarters building later the same evening, Roy Silen learned that Ethel, his wife of nearly 50 years, had died in an automobile accident in Corvallis. its present form. As a historian who studies resource-based communities in the North American West, I am particularly concerned with how people reconciled their ideas about science and natural resources with the landscape and people they The book is encountered at the Andrews Forest and how that dialogue among people, place, ranged in chapters and natural science evolved over time. The book is arranged in chapters that first that first explore explore the various building blocks of community at the Andrews Forest, and then the various building examine the functioning of that community. It begins with the origins and back-blocks of community ground of the Forest...
